Student Voices

In my group, I found that many students, regardless of wherever they are from, aspire to do research or build their experiences outside of their countries to pursue their dreams and goals. And thus, I came up with the idea that UNISON-Global can become a platform of close interactions among laboratories of various countries.

Through discussions with students from different backgrounds and experiences, I was able to learn about the different attitudes and priorities toward satellite development and mission execution.

Sharing each country's situations and position of space engineering industry/ academia in society, I could deepen the understanding about the gaps between developing and developed space countries. This realization enabled me to have a chance to consider the need of international cooperations and more open discussion on this topic.
